Author's Notes:
Came to me at work. Thanks to Lia for the encouragement ;)

James sighs, sitting down on the stool. Cheers surround him, warming his heart as he silently gives thanks.

It wasn't always like this. Years of strife finally took their toll on him.

On all of them. An iron grip, clenching at their hearts and destroying their wildest dreams.

But it was over now. They were, as their song so eloquently put it, finally free.

Free to do what they wanted, free to live again.

James smiles when John looks over, their eyes meeting again that night.

They would get through this together. As it had always been - and always would.
